The possible threats of bio weapon in era of terrorism in Somalia and East Africa Region

By :

Hon. Farhia Mumin and Hon. Sagal Bihi

★Over the last 30 years Somalia become very instable state, where all the national military equipment ended in the hands of militias and civilians which escalated the violence and led many restless decades.

The market become full of military equipment exchanged between dangerous hands illegally, but at the time the danger of bio weapon was not imminent

Now that we all know many non state actors including terrorist organization such as Alshabab and ISIS have strong presence in the country

It became very obvious that they can easily have access to this weapons and move it to other countries in the region which can cause instability and harm civilians .

We have seen ruthless attacks by those organisations in the region last two decades and if they access this weapons they can easily use Somalia –in our current situation- to include biological elements in the their explosions which can escalate the danger level rapidly

The stake holders in this process

- Political Leadership
- Relevant Non Government societies
- Diaspora
- International Partners

Women and Peace in Somalia

Women in Somalia like many other countries have shown over the last 3decades that they are the champions of peace and stability, they have helped to resolve many conflicts, removed barriers put by militias in clan disputed territories

Madiina Mohamud Elmo

Mdiino Mohamud Elmi:

Madiino was well known peace activist that many admired in the hard days of civil war and warlord era, she led the women movement that started in Mogadishu in the 2000 to take the checkpoint and barriers that created insecurity for people of Mogadishu, the same movement helped many public service facilities reopen and resume their services after they have been shut down for so long.
She has been killed by a militia in the afternoon of 16 November 2007, while she was helping an internally displaced people in Mogadishu

THANK YOU FOR YOUR ATTENTION