Participants discussed the best practices for preventing HIV/AIDS, the need to reduce stigma surrounding the virus, and next steps for improving the care and treatment of people living with HIV. #### Activities in Africa:

1998-2004

Junior Professional Officer (JPO) Program in Ghana, Senegal, Mali, Nigeria

In many respects, PGA's innovative JPO structure allowed for the accomplishment of many great successes throughout the course of the program. As a result of PGA's first-hand presence in the parliaments of Ghana, Mali, Nigeria and Senegal, parliamentary awareness was vastly improved around the critical population, human rights and sustainable development issues facing each country. Through focused workshops and information-sharing campaigns, parliamentary capacity and political will to address these issues was vastly increased. Further, as a result of the JPOs' work to bring NGOs and MPs together, government/community collaborations were fostered and networks were formed.

Many of these partnerships have long outlasted the duration of the JPO contract, and these networks continue to address the critical needs in their constituencies. Lastly, PGA's unique position as a multi-party NGO network of MPs has fostered institutional stability, accountability, legislative transparency and inter-agency coordination through bilateral and international exchange. While mobilizing political commitment around population issues, PGA has also played a significant role in the success of important democratic processes, such as elections and political party transition.
